

First time applicants

Effective January 31, 2005, federal law requires individuals applying for a Commercial Driver's License (CDL) with a hazardous materials endorsement to be fingerprinted for a background check.

Renewals

Effective May 31, 2005, federal law requires individuals renewing a CDL with a hazardous materials endorsement to be fingerprinted for a background check.

Hazardous materials endorsement applicants must visit one of twelve locations to be fingerprinted. (See below for locations.)

You will not receive your new or renewed license at the time of application. Allow at least 45 days for the application to be processed. DMV will notify you when your application has been approved or denied by the U.S. Transportation Security Administration (TSA). When approved, you may return to DMV to be photographed and pick up your CDL, provided you have successfully completed the HAZMAT test.

The background check is valid for up to five years.
